Fixes #172 by implementing @rdonkulus's excellent suggestion. Additionally updates the tests to expect the newly encoded URL values, and adds a new test to ensure the serialized output does not contain any unsafe characters.

Thanks again to @rdonkulus for finding and suggesting the fix!

Hi there @redonkulus, I work in Red Hat Product Security and this came across my desk. As it looks CVE worthy, I was wondering if there was ever a CVE assigned for this issue? If not, we (Red Hat) can assist in that process if needed.

@redonkulus : Can you please reach out to Github for CVE assignment like you did for CVE-2019-16769 for the same issue .

I've assigned CVE-2024-11831 from Red Hat's pool to track this as I never got a response to the above.
